“If you want one year of
use prosperity, grow grain.
If you want 10 years of
prosperity, grow trees.
If you want 100 years of
prosperity, grow people.”

the 're'-concept after many years of too much of almost everything and anything, it's time for a bit of breathing space in order to stay positive and productive. People are talking about a recession, but is this an emotional or a material one? Whatever the answer, there is great need for a re-definition of balance today. By redefining and refocusing, perhaps we can re-discover who we are and what we truly stand for.

When the idea for the 're'-concept first arose, we thought it was possibly too obvious. Realising that although it appeared to be a simple idea, we believed that the visualising and conceptualising of it would be a very interesting task. After reflecting quite a while on the idea of a 're'-era, we considered that the new season's buzzwords might surface as a narrative of 're'-words. The 're'-season has begun and the 're'-generation is advancing.

Bearing this in mind, risk-taking becomes an important ingredient for future product development. For, without risk, nothing will ever happen. If we continue to sell the same concept and the same products without developing new solutions, we will just be up-grading to the next thing. The entrance to quality is the 're'-newal and 're'-development of a product. Therefore change and the re-shaping of the future must be constant.
